HMS Quorn showing off her gleaming new NATO funnel badge and pennant

Welcome to the first newsletter of HMS Quorn's deployment to the Baltic as part of the NATO Standing Mine Counter Measures Group One (SNMCMG1). Over the next 12 weeks, the Ship will be sending out regular newsletters to update affiliates, families and friends on our progress and general goings on.

Sailing

After a morale rousing speech from Commodore P A McAlpine CBE, Commander Portsmouth Flotilla, QUORN set sail to Glasgow bathed in glorious sunshine to meet her NATO Taskgroup. Making her way around the Cornish Peninsula and up the West Coast of the UK, she was greeted by uncharacteristically glass-like seas and calm winds.

Gunnery

Before heading up towards Scotland, QUORN was first required to carry out several trials to her weapons systems and sensors. With continued good weather and clear of shipping, the air was soon filled with the smell of cordite and the booming sound of the 30mm functioning.

30mm gun firing

On completion, members of the Ship's Company were given the opportunity to brush up on their Gunnery skills firing the Assault Rifle and Minigun Force Protection Weapons.

Joining NATO

HMS Pembroke passing the NATO baton to HMS Quorn

After 3 days of sailing up the coast of the UK, QUORN made her way through the Cumbrae Gap towards Rosneath Patch to await the arrival of the NATO Taskgroup. With the backdrop of the sun rising, QUORN rendezvoused with the SNMCMG1 Task Group and conducted her first courtesy salute to her new Operational Commander embarked on the Flagship, FGS Donau before proceeding up the Clyde to Glasgow.

Next stop the Baltic.....
